Monthly Fund Manager's comment

In November, the fund recorded a slightly negative absolute performance and a flat relative one. Main drivers of the performance were bond carry, while credit spreads remained broadly stable compared to the start of the month. U.S. government yields declined by roughly 5 bps, while European yields rose modestly, increasing by 5 bps over the period. Market sentiment remained broadly risk-on. Early in the month, volatility spiked in technology companies amid growing concerns about a potential AI bubble. However, in the latter half of November, many of these firms recovered a significant portion of their earlier losses. The month also marked the conclusion of the longest U.S. government shutdown, restoring the availability of key economic data. Looking ahead, markets are pricing in more than three 25-basis-point cuts for the U.S. Treasury, while expectations for the Euro area remain close to zero cuts. In this context, we continued to participate selectively in primary market deals where we identified attractive new issue premiums, supported by solid market demand for new supply.

Our approach remained highly selective toward U.S. and Canadian issuers, with a preference for short-dated, high-quality names that offer a more favorable risk/return profile compared to longer-term hybrids. At the end of November, the fund maintained a tactical underweight to U.S. issuers and was slightly overweight on Canadian names. Overall, exposure to U.S. and Canadian issuers represented around 30% of the benchmark. Duration remains slightly underweight relative to the benchmark, although it slightly increased compared to previous month. The slightly underweight position of duration primarily reflects the reduced exposure to U.S. credit. The portfolio's absolute duration stood at 2.9 years. Corporate bonds accounted for 85% of the portfolio at month-end, stable compared to previous month. Our allocations remain tilted toward countercyclical sectors. Utilities represent 34% of the NAV, followed by energy at 21% of the NAV and communications sectors at 9% of the NAV.
