Monthly Fund Manager's comment

The S&P 500 rebounded in August, gaining 2.7% after a broadly flat July. The S&P 500, its equal-weighted version, and the Russell 2000 all set new all-time highs during the month. Much of July's rotation reversed as the AI trade came back. Nvidia closed a strong Q2 earnings season with another blockbuster report: revenues more than doubled year-on-year, which confirmed that demand for AI infrastructure is still very strong. Leadership within Technology changed, however. Software rebounded around 16% and outperformed semiconductors for the second month in a row, as investors increasingly rewarded companies showing tangible returns from AI. Semiconductors gained only about 1%, after being up nearly 10% in mid-August. Information Technology (+6.2%) accounted for more than three-quarters of the index's monthly return. Monetary policy remained a headwind for long-duration assets. At Jackson Hole, Fed Chair Warsh struck a more hawkish tone than expected and suggested that the next move could be a hike rather than a cut. Markets moved to price with a probability of around 65% of a rate increase in September. The 10-year Treasury yield rose above 4.75% for the first time since January 2025. The 30-year yield reached a new post-2007 high of around 5.3%, then eased after the Treasury unexpectedly announced larger buybacks of longer-dated bonds. Against this backdrop, the growth-to-value rotation paused: the Russell 1000 Growth index (+3.7%) outperformed the Russell 1000 Value index (+2.0%). Value still keeps a wide lead year-to-date. At sector level, performance was mixed, with five of the eleven sectors positive. Energy (+7.0%) led again, adding to its 12.6% gain in July. It was supported by continued US-Iran tensions, with Brent around $90 and WTI close to $86. Materials (+6.0%) benefited from the strong rally in gold, and Health Care (+4.9%) also did well. Financials (+1.3%) posted only a modest gain after their strong July. Utilities (-4.8%) were the weakest sector, hurt by rising yields, followed by Industrials (-2.6%) and Real Estate (-1.9%). In terms of portfolio activity, we took advantage of the market's moves to rebuild exposure to two areas we had previously reduced. First, we added back to Application Software. After the sharp de-rating of recent months, the segment offered attractive valuations, and the rebound that began in August suggested that investors are starting to reward companies that can show tangible returns from AI. We also increased our position in Health Care, a sector that combines defensive characteristics with still-undemanding valuations and solid earnings visibility, which should help the portfolio in an environment of elevated volatility and rising rates. Overall, these changes reduce the underweight in Technology and make the portfolio more balanced, while we keep our core positions in Financials and Energy.
