Monthly Fund Manager’s comment

U.S. equities rallied sharply in June, with the S&P 500 gaining approximately +5%, marking its strongest month since November 2023. The Nasdaq outperformed, advancing +6.6%, while the Dow Jones rose more modestly by +2.3%, reflecting a clear tilt in favor of growth and high-duration names. The rally occurred despite a complex macro backdrop: markets had to digest persistent inflation, softening consumer confidence, conflicting labor signals, and heightened trade policy noise. Early-month strength was supported by short-covering, improving technical momentum, and a brief easing in rate expectations before the Fed reaffirmed its hawkish tone mid-month.

From a sector perspective, Information Technology and Communication Services were the top performers, driven by continued enthusiasm around AI and strong quarterly results from key constituents. On the other end, Energy and Industrials lagged, as weaker forward revisions, trade sensitivity, and cautious capex outlooks weighed on performance.

During June, we increased our exposure to Information Technology, extending the overweight amid ongoing strength in AI-related names and improving sentiment. This adjustment reflects our continued conviction in the sector’s structural earnings contribution. We slightly reduced exposure to Financials and Consumer Staples. While both remain overweight, the trimming reflects profit-taking after strong relative performance and a rotation toward higher-beta growth areas. Other sector exposures remained broadly stable. The portfolio continues to run with a beta below 1, consistent with our cautious stance and preference for quality and earnings visibility

The fund underperformed the benchmark in June. Growth stocks outperformed value stocks, driven by a resurgence in technology and communication services. Large-cap stocks led the rally, reflecting investor preference for liquidity and earnings stability. In a market increasingly embracing a Goldilocks narrative, we remain committed to a disciplined and selective approach — as long as this backdrop holds, and market leadership continues to deliver on earnings.
